Getting to Perugia

From Rome – More than likely you will arrive at Rome’s Leonardo Da Vinci airport, referred to as Roma Fiumicino (FCO). You have two choices for getting to Perugia: bus and train. There is an ATM (called a “bancomat” in Italian) inside the airport; American bank cards will work with a fee. While you can pay for train tickets with a credit card, the Sulga bus only takes cash.

By bus – The bus run by the Sulga company will take you from the airport directly to Perugia, to Piazza Partigiani bus station, a walk and some escalators away from the historic center. The bus ride is about three and a half hours and, at last check, €19.90. You can check timetables in English at the Sulga site, WWW.SULGA.IT. Look for destination “Perugia – Piazza Partigiani.” To go to Perugia with Sulga, exit the terminal and walk to your right along the sidewalk. Above at right you can see a photo from Google maps: you will be exiting the airport on the right of the picture, and have to go down the sidewalk to the bus area (you can see it in the very end, in the middle of the Google photo). Look for the bus with SULGA written on the side, or ask the bus drivers there where the Sulga bus is (you can also just say “Perugia” and most will understand and indicate the bus). You have to buy your ticket online.

You will arrive at the Piazza Partigiani bus station. Exit, cross the street, and follow other people up the steps and escalators, through the Pauline Fortress, and out into Piazza Italia. At the far end of Perugia’s main street, Corso Vanucci, you’ll see the Fontana Maggiore, the side of cathedral, and the main piazza.

By train – Depending on your arrival time and how long it takes to collect your bags, it may make better sense to take the trains. As you exit customs, go right while still inside the airport, following the train icons. You’ll have to go down an escalator or elevator, under the street, and back up to the FCO train station. On your right as you enter you will see a counter where you can buy your overpriced ticket to Rome’s main station, Roma Termini. Just say “Roma Termini.” You can also buy a train ticket all the way through to Perugia. The train will leave from one of the two tracks and forty minutes later you will be at Rome’s station. You can try to use the automats or go in the ticket lines to get your ticket to Perugia. Be aware that depending on connections, you may or may not have to change trains at either Foligno or Terontola (see the map below). Remember to stamp your tickets in the little machines on the tracks. Fast trains have assigned seats: see your ticket.

There are several secondary train stations before the main one in Perugia. Do not get off at Perugia Ponte San Giovanni, Perugia Università, or Perugia Ospedale. The correct station says simply “Perugia” on the blue sign. You can take a taxi from in front of the station, but the easiest way to get to the center is the light-rail network, the MiniMetrol. Go to the end of Track 1 to the station with the elevated red rails coming out of it. The system closes at 9:20pm evenings, 8:30pm Sundays and holidays. Tickets are an extortionary €1.50. Go towards the “Stazione Pincetto,” where you will get off. Take the elevators or escalators up and follow the rest of the people to Piazza Matteotti, just parallel to Perugia’s main street.

From Pisa or Florence – There are easy albeit slow train connections from both the Pisa and Florence airports. From the former, take the train direct to the main Florence train station, Firenze Santa Maria Novella (Firenze S.M. Novella), where you can take a train either direct to Perugia (the last station will be Foligno) or transfer at Terontola and then on to Perugia.

From the Florence airport (“Amerigo Vespucci International Airport,” FLR) there is a ATAF-SITA “Vola in Bus” service to the Florence main train station.

In Perugia – Once you reach the center of Perugia, you will see the long main pedestrian street, Corso Vannucci, and the main piazza, Piazza IV Novembre. From the the Corso, go left around the Fountain and through the large portal indicated here. The stairs up to the Institute is on your right at the top of the ramp.

Taxi – Should you want to take a taxi in Perugia, call + 39 075.500.4888. Some addresses of hotels are above. Please quote the “Food Conference” when you make your hotel reservation. The Umbra Institute is located at Piazza IV Novembre, 23.
